FARM AND HOME NEWS

By Jim Smith
Appomattox County Agent

Visiting tobacco farmers over the county we find that a number of fields are moderately to severely infested with grasshoppers. Those who would like to treat their tobacco for grasshoppers may use either the bait method or a dust. In using the bait, you would like to mix 50 pounds of wheat bran with 1 pound of Paris Green and enough water to moisten. This should be mixed to about the consistency of wet sawdust. After it is mixed, it should be broadcast in the row middles.

To dust for grasshoppers, use a 5% chlordane dust or 2½% aldrin dust. Apply these dusts at the rate of 20 to 30 pounds per acre.

If sprays are preferred, use wettable powders or emulsion concentrates.

Commercial preparations of these insecticides vary greatly in concentration and directions for mixing as given on the labels should be followed.

In applying these sprays or dusts, it should also be put on the borders of the tobacco area as grasshoppers normally enter tobacco fields from adjacent fields.

Therefore, you might be able to stop a number of insects crossing if the borders are also sprayed.

Advantages of Corn Driers

There are many items on the credit side of the corn drier. A study of 25 Virginia farms shows it was possible to harvest corn at an average of 3 weeks earlier when driers were available. Early harvesting means less field and storage losses as well as less insect damage in the corn as it stands in the field.

A corn picker does a better job and the land is cleared so that the small grain cover crops may be seeded early.

Corn driers simply remove the excess moisture from the corn by forcing air through it. There are both natural air and heated air driers on the market and both can dry several bins per season. Almost any farm building can be used, such as cribs and round metal bins built in existing buildings.

Portable driers also can be used for small grain and hay. If you are interested in driers for corn, you might pick up a bulletin at the county agent's office entitled, "Give Your Corn Air."

MEAT - TYPE HOG

A great deal of publicity has been given to the new grading system recently released by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. This should mean more dollars for the farm producers as you will be paid for producing the meat-type hogs rather than the lardy type as has been practiced for years. Some buyers are already paying as much as a dollar per hundred more for meaty hogs and it is quite possible that the differential may become even greater.

Meat type hogs reach the market weight as soon and sometimes sooner than the lard type hogs. They also make better gains on less feed. One U. S. D. A. test shows they require about $1.25 less per feed for each 100 pounds of gain than did the lard type hogs.

The meat type hog is not to be confused with the lean hog which has less muscle. The top grade hogs not only have less fat but also have heavy muscling in the hams and loins. The new grades are U. S. 1, U. S. 2, U. S. 3 and Medium. The former names were Choice, 1, 2, and 3 and Medium.

U. S. 1 2 and 3 carcasses have at least 2/10 inches less fatback than was previously required for Choice 1, 2 and 3 respectively. The medium grade has been changed from a range of 1.1 to 1.5 inches to 1.0 to 1.3 inches fatback.

PRICE SPREADS IN MILK

The price spread has reduced in recent months between fluid and manufactured milk in Virginia, the price figures for April showing the price for fluid milk is now about 10c less than last year, but the price for manufactured milk is 20c higher. This means the difference in price between the two types of milk has been reduced by 30c. The economists say that the relatively unfavorable price for manufactured milk in the last year evidently had some effect on production.

During the last four months of this year, production of manufactured milk is 4% lower than the same period last year.

Milk for fluid consumption has been above last year.

The total production for April was about the same as a year earlier, while the production in the U. S. was slightly less. This coupled with a slightly greater per capita consumption has resulted in a smaller surplus so far this year. This has meant a 20% reduction from last year in government support purchases of dairy products. With total dairy production holding near last year's level in spite of the smaller number of milk cows in both Virginia and the U. S., milk production per cow evidently has jumped considerably. In fact the May production per cow in Virginia was about 25 pounds above May, 1954.

INSECTICIDES ON HAY

A question asked many times by farmers who are spraying their forage crops to control certain insects is how long they must wait after treating before they can use these hays.

Lindane may be used on alfalfa grown for hay or pasture at the rate of 1/2 pound per acre. However, a 14-day waiting period is required before the forage can be fed dairy animals or animals being fattened for slaughter.

Toxophene may be used on alfalfa grown for hay or pasture but a 30-day waiting period is required before feeding to dairy animals or animals being fattened for slaughter.

Malathion is recommended for use on alfalfa at the rate of 12 to 14 ounces of actual malathion per acre, but this should not be applied within fifteen days of harvest or while the crop is in bloom.

Parathion, methyl-parathion, and metacide are recommended for use on alfalfa at the rate of 4 oz. of actual material per acre. The alfalfa should not be harvested within fifteen days after the last application.

Benzene hexochloride is not recommended for use on forage crops. The Foods and Drugs Administration accepted it for use on alfalfa for hay before it is two inches tall or immediately after cutting. It is not recommended for use on any crop which may be followed by a root crop within the next three years.

Do not use Systox on any forage crop. It is released and available for use but it is not recommended by the entomologists because of the hazard involved in its application.

All insecticides are poisonous to man. Be sure to read the label carefully and follow the proper precautions.

FISH BAIT

Many of our farm people enjoy relaxation from farm activities through fishing in their farm ponds or nearby lakes or rivers. Information provided by the Wildlife Service tells us that if we have problems finding bait we can eliminate these simply by taking an ordinary wash tub filling it with the proper soil and burying it about three inches above the soil and adding some 50 to 100 worms to start a worm bed. The English red worms or red wigglers are preferred by most pole and cork experts. However, the moisture and soil are key considrations in a productive worm bed. A fine clay loam containing lots of humus or well decomposed organic matter is ideal. Locate the bed in the shade and moisten every week or two or more often during the summer if it is hot.

To provide needed drainage, the specialists suggest cutting a two-inch hole in the bottom of the container and covering it with a patch of fine copper screen wire.

Now, remember, don't disturb the worms too often. You might like to have two tubs. This will allow the use of one while the other is left undisturbed.

Worms have to be fed because their travel is quite limited. As you know, worms feed on the soil from which they digest organic matter, both animal and vegetable. The leaves of celery, cabbage, turnips, lettuce and other vegetables are readily taken by the worms when small amounts are worked into the top soil. A mixture of 1 part kitchen fat with 3 parts of corn meal also makes an excellent ration.

Farm Work Most Dangerous

Chicago, Ill.- Does crossing a city street leave you a nervous wreck? Do you long for the safety of farm life?

Well, you had better think twice. For the 1955 edition of the National Safety Council's statistical yearbook, "Accident Facts," shows that agriculture ranks among the most dangerous of industries.

Only high hazard occupations such as construction and mining surpass the accidental death rate of farm workers.
